OOC: I'm going to do a somewhat sectional wrapup, giving you guys a chance to put in some of your doings durring the time, and if need be, I can go more in depth at any particular spot.

The evening continues, though somewhat subdued. Carsis attempts to get Lasair to try a dance with him, Scarlet and Oirhandir dance and Troi has no problems finding a dance partner if he wishes.

Troi Hide

The Sherrif stops by to hand you a day's pay, and says "It looks like we'll no longer require your services. I'm sorry things went down like this though, and you have been a pleasure to work with."

At some point a halfling slips Troi a small pouch, containing a womanly smelling scarf, and a note that reads: Hope you track me down some time, Melinda

Lasair Hide

As the evening winds down, Carsis says to you, "Lady Lasair, it has been a pleasure to meet you, and I only wish it had been under other circumstances. I will be leaving on the morrow, but I do hope to see you again sometime in my travels."

Carsis pulls out a spear head, the metal inlayed with onyx in a somewhat ornimental fasion, with a small hole through the mounting point, with a simple leather tie running through it. "Please, take this. It is but a small token of my appretiation."

Oirhandir

"Looks like I've got a bit more free time now that there's no weddin to plan for," Scarlet says.
"Whatever shall I do?" she says in mock despair.

Scarlet is quite content to dance the night away with Oirhandir, but it is quite obvious she is tiring quickly, perhaps not fully recovered from her ordeal the night before.

Oirhandir gave his sweetheart a squeeze. "I think you should give those dancing shoes a rest before you wear them out!", he laughed. "Come, I'll walk you to your camp again. This time, we can try it without the kidnapers." He held her tenderly as they walked toward the south field. Surely with all the commotion in town, any troublemakers would have other things on their mind than two elves making their way to camp after the feast.

Troi watches his companions for a moment, then shakes his head and wanders off.

I suppose this is as good an ending as we could have hoped for. Time to write about it, while it's still fresh in my head...

"Don't worry 'bout it." Troi responds, accepting the money and then waving him off. "It's been nice workin' with you too. Though hopefully next time ya won't need it." He smiles grimly.

After receiving the note, Troi heads back to Ingus' caravan, rifles through his equipment, pulls out a large bottle of ink and an inkpen, and begins writing.

"Very well. Then it shall be so. May you always find water and shade," Lasair nods and accepts the gift hesitantly, as she has nothing to give in return. Still it would be an insult not to take it...but now she had zij.

Oirhandir

Hide

The you escort Scarlet back to her camp, and she gives you a tender kiss and a grateful smile once you both arrive safely. She waves and slips into her tent, and you head back to your camp, with an almost otherworldly smile on your face

Lasair

Hide

"May you as well, miss Lasair," he says, with a soft and grateful smile. "You honor me by accepting my gift."

Carsis walks away, disapearing into the night, while whistling a light hearted tune.

As the day ends, everyone eventually returns to camp, except Sunny, though Ingus does not seem too concerned of this, saying "Let the lad head where his heart takes him. He's been though enough."

The morning comes all too soon, and dawns on the last day of the festival.

OOC: If you have anything in general you wanted to do on the last day, let me know, or simply write a small epilog to your final day. I'll fill in detail as needed. The end is near 😊 Troi nods his approval.

During the next day, Troi practices with his whip and boomerang, and does not stray from the caravan. It is apparent from the vigor with which he practices that he is restless and ready to be on the move again.

Oirhandir stood his watch, took a few hours of trance, made inquiries as to the collection of his pay for the last night's work, and then made similar inquiries as to the whereabouts of Sunny (although, to the extent that these led to tales of the lad running off with the Freefolk to seek his one true love, the elf was uninterested in wasting too much of the day chasing after such tales). After that, the bard's chief interest was in spending time with Scarlet, perhaps taking in the closing ceremonies before helping Ingus and his men strike camp and head back to Orussus.

(OOC: I've spotted him periodically but rarely in various other forums over the past several months, but he seems to have abandoned LEW)

The final day of the festival is an odd mix of joyous celebration, reluctant acceptance that the end is near, and some nervousness about the events of the previous evening. Sunny seems nowhere to be found, and Fang and Hellen seem as inseparable as ever, working on his speech for the end of the festival. Indeed, even Ingus seems almost excited about the prospect of leaving, speaking fondly of his warm bed at home.

OOC: The final meal coming soon.

Oirhandir asked Ingus if they would be paid for the previous night's work this morning (as had been customary), or if that would be forthcoming once everyone was safely back in Orussus.

OOC: Sorry, missed putting in that tidbit, everyone got paid, including Troi for yesterday's work for the town. 10 GP for all, 20 more for Troi. I'll do XP and such at the very end, as we're not too far.
