Mysteries/Powers Known: When a new adumbrate level is attained, the character gains new mysteries as if he had also attained a level in any one mystery using class he belonged to before he added the prestige class. He gains additional power points per day and access to new powers as if he had also gained a level in any one manifesting class he belonged to previously. He does not, however, gain any other benefit a character of either class would have gained (bonus feats from completed paths, metapsionic, or item creation feats, psicrystal special abilities, and so on). This essentially means that he adds the level of adumbrate to the level of whatever other mystery using class and manifesting class the character has, then determines mysteries, caster level, power points per day, powers known, and manifester level accordingly.

If a character had more than one mystery using class or more than one manifesting class before he became a adumbrate, he must decide to which class he adds each level of adumbrate for purpose of determining mysteries, caster level, power points per day, powers known, and manifester level.
