

Background
The following adventure takes place in the vicinity of Orbless. Orbless is a small town whose population makes a living by farming the land. There is also a minor portion of the population that lives off trade and craftsmanship. Orbless lies two days ride from a slightly larger town – Underry.

Speaking with the commoners

Successful communications check: The curfew subjected to the locals by the clergy is most unpopular. No one anyone has heard of is planning to leave the village for fear of the god's wrath. –But how come young master Gideon left the village in spite of the curfew?

Failed communications check: These are horrible times.

Speaking with the merchants

Successful communications check: Ahlanna, the carpenter's daughter has gone missing. The merchants fear that the bandits have kidnapped her. The merchants know the carpenter is willing to pay handsomely for her safe return to the village.
Failed communications check: The merchants are happy to do business with just about anyone. They don't answer questions because they have better things to do. If pressed they mutter something about it would be better to go searching for missing people than stand around loitering in shops.

Speaking with the guards

Successful communications check: The guards can tell the story of young master Gideon who left the village on a quest to liberate the prisoners. Gideon is now missing himself and has left no clues as to where the bandits might be hole up. Gideon brought with him two squires: Anne and Belfry.

Failed communications check: Members of the guards won't divulge anything to outsiders unless ordered to by the Mayor.

Speaking with the clergy

Successful communications check: The clergy are worried that the recent kidnappings, if handled carelessly, might attract folks of ill repute to the area. Steps must be taken to ascertain that no one outside the village knows about the current state of affairs. The bandits responsible for the kidnappings must be confronted and made to seize and desist. The church will pay a ransom for each kidnapper, dead or alive.
Failed communications check: Portents show that anyone leaving the village until the next full moon will suffer horrible misfortune. Accidents will strike, animals will come down with disease, and crops will fail.

Speaking with the nobles

Successful communications check: The nobles exclaim that young master Gideon is the most courageous man alive. The ransom will be paid in full as soon as the kidnappers and the mayor have agreed upon a meeting place. Now, someone that can be trusted must deliver the ransom. Preferably someone from the nobility that isn't afraid to get his hands dirty.
Failed communications check: The nobles might offer to pay adventurers to deliver a package sometime in the next couple of days. The mayor will call on adventurers if no nobles are available.
