

Unto Dame Brionna of Stanway, Captain of the Imperial Guard and Chief Military Advisor to the Throne

From: Lord General Barius de Bitwhittle, commander of the expeditionary force to eradicate the servants of the Ram in the north

Greetings Dame,

Thanks to the assistance of our Elven allies we were able to gate through to this location and have, with the help of the directed fire of their craft, eradicated the foe at its source, as directed.

I have refused to allow looting of any sort, and have burned the bodies of the enemy, together with their belongings, in keeping with the recommendation of priests of the Light who accompanied our expedition.

We suffered significant casualties, but are still battle worthy.

We find ourselves, however, north of the Barrier Mountains and await directions from you or from his August and Imperial Majesty as to how to proceed. There are two passes that we can use, both of course come with a price, or we can attempt any other missions that you or the Council have in mind.

We have bivouacked and now await word as to our next move. We are well supplied and our wounded can heal while we await direction.

With utmost regard and humble servitude always to the Throne of Canberry.

I remain.
