

Unto the Mouth
From the Nose

It seems to stink as far as we are concerned, that Dar Scrivener is pursuing legal cause against the estate of General Dame Hilda of Brenning for duties that he had performed for the General prior to her death. As she died in valorous service to the Archduke, and as she is regarded as a hero among all who knew her, and as her estate is meager in any event and what bits she has should be preserved for her family, which has no real means of support – we wonder if the behavior of Dar Scrivener is appropriate – and we wonder what His Eminent Grace's government prefers to see done about such a thing.

We know it is minor – but minor rumors of behaviors cause long term ripples. It is likely that the courts will have to rule for the Scrivener, even though the General did not live to receive any of his work (though he is most willing to deliver it to her estate). I believe that, particularly as the work was two prayer books that she apparently intended one of as a gift – this will set poorly with the commons. Dame Hilda's work went beyond commanding crown forces. She was a force for charity and justice throughout her life.

We leave it in your capable hands honored Mouth.
